4 DISTRICT OF NEVADA

5 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

6 Plaintiff,

7 v.

8 JEANNIE SUTHERLAND, et al,

9 Defendant.

2:10-cr-0356-LDG-LRL

ORDER

11 The government has objected to the proposed testimony of defendant Sutherland's expert 12 Thomas Tarter (#198, response # 203, reply #204). The court conducted a hearing on January 18, 13 2012, to consider whether Tarter's proposed testimony is admissible under Fed. R. Evid. 702, 14 whether its probative value is outweighed by the risk of waste of time and jury confusion, and 15 whether Tarter's opinion is reliable under the standards of Daubert v. Merrell Dow 16 Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S.579 (1993). Tarter was present at the hearing and testified.

17 The parties agree that Tarter's extensive experience in the lending and real estate industry
18 qualifies him as an expert in the field of finance and mortgage lending. The question to be decided 19 is really whether the jury can receive "appreciable help" from Tarter's proposed testimony. See 20 United States v. Gwaltney, 790 F.2d 1378, 1381-82 (9th Cir. 1986). A major thrust of 21 Sutherland's justification for Tarter's testimony is to counter the government's efforts to prove the 22 materiality element of bank fraud; that is, that Sutherland's acts or statements had a tendency to 23 influence, or were capable of influencing, the lender's decision. Thus, Tarter's testimony would 24 support the conclusion that the lender, Mortgage IT, knew or should have known from the HUD-1 25 statements that large sums were being paid to Dolphin Bay Investments from escrow, which 26 should have prompted further investigation by the lender.

1           As this court has previously ruled, Mortgage IT's negligence or lack of diligence is not a 2 defense to bank fraud. See United States v. Ciccone, 219 F.3d 1078, 1083 (9th Cir. 2000). So,
3 even if it were the case that MortgageIT should have been put on notice to do further due 4 diligence, it would not follow that the alleged misstatements were not capable of influencing
5 MortgageIT's decision to proceed. Aside from the lack of relevance of Tarter's testimony in this 6 regard, Tarter has no first-hand knowledge of the circumstances of the real estate and mortgage
7 transactions in question—he has had no connection with MortgageIT, and has not spoken with 8 MortgageIT personnel regarding the transactions--and is not in a position to assess what 9 MortgageIT knew or should have known in this given situation. In that regard, Tarter's opinion 10 about what MortgageIT knew or should have known will not only lend no appreciable help to the 11 jury, but any probative value of such testimony devoid of factual knowledge is substantially 12 outweighed by the risk of misleading and confusing the jury as to the materiality element of the 13 charged conduct.

14           In addition, for the reasons enumerated by the government in the record, the court finds 15 that other aspects of Tarter's testimony will not assist the jury. For instance, characterizing
16 references in the HUD-1 statements as clearly or conspicuously disclosing the fees to Dolphin Bay
17 is not helpful as the jury will view the documents and be in a position to make a determination 18 about their contents without being told what they say by an expert. Tarter's assertion that the 19 lender independently approved the loans is conceded by the parties and not at issue. And, of 20 course, any involvement of Sutherland in the lending transactions in this case are factual issues
21 whose proof, or lack thereof, should be the subject of argument to the jury. In sum, the court finds
22 that Tarter's proposed testimony will not assist the jury to understand the issues in an appreciable
23 way. Accordingly,
